The prettiest suggestion for an early autumn wedding is to have all the flowers asters or fall roses. The rich shades and delicate tints of the flowers are as beautiful as the roses of June. The bride wears white, of course, and her flowers must be white, but the variety comes with her attendants. The latest fashionable gowns are white mull, made as simply as possible. The six bridesmaids all wear the white mull gowns and brown Leghorn hats, with brown gloves to match. Each hat is trimmed with a wreath of flowers, and each maid carries a garland of asters, about two and a half yards long. Two wear light pink asters, two lavender and two dark pink. A pretty effect is given by the flowers for one being light pink and those of the one next being dark pink. Then the light lavender walks with one having dark lavender. The combinations of colors is For the church decorations ferns asters of white or all colors are used, and, if the wedding is at home, each room is adorned with flowers of a single color. Asters are of such variety that they allow for the exercise of considerable ingenuity in their arrangement. A high-noon, September or October, church wedding, with costumes and flowers, as and handsome event.

Friday, after weeks of sunshine and dust, the rain came, and humanity was thankful. At night the drops were still falling, and wise neople, who were obliged to go out of the house, prepared themselves with elothes which rain would not injure, and shoes, ditto. At the intersection of two streets, where the cars pass, there came toward the corner two young girls, each escorted by a young boy with an umbrella. The girls wore white dresses and white shoes, dainty white hats, and were unprovided with wraps, gossamers or rubbers. They had evidently just come from their homes, and were going out for the evening. What sondition their white shoes and dresses would be in when they reached their destination it would be impossible to say. Their vanity was certainly their weakness, and would probably be the ruin of all that finery. What kind of mothers they have would be a conundrum difficult to solve. The kindest unraveling to the enigma would be to say they were exphans. In the midst of the damp seats, seiled floor and dripping roof of the car soiled floor and dripping roof of the car was the white garb, and turned out at the corner of Washington and Illinois streets to wait for another car, they looked decidedly out of place. Such costumes on such a night was enough to make a real womanly woman, who likes pretty clothes,
